

DelMarcus Brunson

Jennifer Betts - Barfield

Descriptive Essay 1

16 April 2014

I Can't Explain

I know we have all seen some weird people and behaviors in life but I would have to say since I began my career as a Valdosta State University student I have seen the worst of them all. From the guy with the unicycle to the guy who has a motorized bicycle. I know you may think, " Oh he means like a motorcycle or something", no, imagine the most beat up bike rusted to the point where you think the bike is actually brown with an engine strapped to the back of it! On top of that we have a guy that looks like shaggy from Scooby Doo, a guy that walks around barefoot and a girl that sings at a tone that reminds me of a severe weather siren or a room full of twenty hungry and annoyed babies. You are probably wondering what the hell goes on at Valdosta but honestly I can't explain.

I can't explain the unicycle guy but I can admit that it is pretty cool. If I knew how to ride a unicycle I would probably ride it around school too. It must be cool to know you are probably the only one on campus who can do something. On the other hand its just plain weird. Why are you riding a unicycle on a college campus? Is this for attention or do you really find it fun to ride a unicycle only to go to class and back to your room? Riding by turning heads one after another like the wave goes through a baseball game. Stirring up chatter like the big game everybody saw last night as he rides to class as if everything is normal, as if he isn't on a unicycle.

I can't explain the guy who has turned his bicycle into a motorcycle. Although it may be hard to explain, I can give this guy the fact that it's actually a cool idea. What person as a kid didn't dream of this type of experiment? That is of course until we discovered motorcycles. Hearing that old rusted brown bike scurry by me fascinates and confuses me all at the same time.

I can't explain the guy that looks like Shaggy from Scooby Doo. Let's start with the fact that his hair is a bright tangerine orange with curls as tight as a Slinky's, bounces when he walks and droops when he sits down. The guy is literally a character. I can't explain this one because the hairstyle hasn't really ever been in style and second he gets no compliments from anybody. I can applaud him for being different though, because I have never seen a more "out there" hair style in my life.

I can't explain the guy that walks around barefoot no matter where he is going. Rain, hail, sleet, or snow you can always count on him to have no shoes or socks on. Besides this being absolutely insane I can't really gather an idea of why someone would want to do that. It doesn't even seem comfortable walking around like that. I know me as a kid, when ii walked outside it was always that one rock I stepped on that felt like ten razor blades had been lodged into my foot that made me never go outside without at least socks. This makes this guy intriguing to me.

I can't explain the lady that walks around singing out loud. It's unexplainable because she can't sing, usually when you can't sing you don't sing out loud. Imagine the worst possible noise you can think of and add the constant noise of screeching cars, crying babies, morning alarms, and snoring, and you still won't be as annoyed as you will be when you hear her. She's sounds and looks crazy every time I see her and nothing ever changes

So from the unicycle to the engine ran bicycle, to the shaggy look-a-like to the dying whale, I can say I truly live on a campus with which I can't explain the activities that take place. And I can say is that they are weird ad don't make sense sometimes, but when you sit back and think about it, it's actually cool.